Ralph H. Page, of Detroit, will be the best man.

Of Georgette Crepe.
The bride's gown is made of georgette crepe over white satin with a court train caught at the waist line with orange blossoms. The bodice is an artistic combination of satin georgette crepe and rare duchess lace, which was worn by her mother on her wedding gown. The same rare old lace forms pinnies, draped to the skirt with clusters of the orange blossoms. The long veil will be of tulle arranged on the hair with a cape of the duchess lace, which will be worn with a band of the orange blossoms encircling the head. A shower bouquet of white orchids and lilies of the valley will complete the modish costume.

Cloth of silver, covered with light green tulle, will form the gowns of the main of honor and the bridesmaids, which will be made with tight bodices. The tulle, edged with silver ribbon, will form full, rippling tunics. They will wear picture hats of white horse hair braid and tulle with sheafs of silver wheat about the crown. Their bouquets will be of pink roses.

The matron of honor will wear a dainty white net frock and a white straw hat trimmed with white roses. She will carry pink roses.

Reception to Follow.
The library in Chevy Chase will be the scene of a small reception after the ceremony. The mantels will be banked with daisies and other white spring flowers, combined with ferns.

Mrs. Durant will be assisted in receiving the guests by the bridegroom's mother, Mrs. O. K. Burton, of Champlain, Ill. Mrs. Durant's costume will be of black net over black satin made with a tunic of silver embroidered net which also forms the bodice, and a hat of black mohair braid and tulle, trimmed with parrot feathers.

The bride's going away gown will be a tailored suit of blue and black checked duvety with trimmings of black leather, and with it she will wear a large blue hat with a drooping brim, trimmed with blue satin and flowers. After a Northern trip Mr. Burton and his bride will leave about July 1 for their home in Porto Rico, where Mr. Burton is engaged as a civil engineer.

Besides Mr. and Mrs. Burton, the bridegroom's parents, the out-of-town guests in Washington for the wedding are Miss Seymour, of Detroit, great-aunt of the bride; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Perry Lippett, of Porto Rico; Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Martin, of Parkersburg, W. Va.; and Miss Yennowine, of Illinois.
